After graduating from Helix, I attended Grossmont Junior College and then San Diego State, earning my degree in Mathematics. (This was before the colleges offered degrees in Computer Science). I married my first husband, Rusty Justis, right after graduation. I got a job with a local Government contractor, and worked with computers as a tactical communications specialist for 44 years. I was fortunate enough to work for all of the services as well as for NATO. Rusty and I divorced in 1979, and I eventually remarried in 2003. My current husband, John Davis, retired a few years ahead of me, and we moved to a small town in the beautiful Pacific Northwest. I continued to telecommute from home until I finally retired last year. I never had children but I have become somewhat of an animal rescue person, and even had 13 pets at one time – extreme, I know. We now have three cats and one dog – all have been rescued!
