Wow! San Diego State [College], as it was then called, was my next stop after Helix High School.

My goal since 4th grade had been to become a teacher. I married Don two years later, also a teacher, and we had 2 sons Scott and Matt.

At first I was a Stay-at-home Mom doing Child Care and then continued my education at SDSU and began teaching; first in Christian Schools then in Public Schools; finishing as a Resource Specialist.

18 years after our first sons Scott, (also a Helix grad) and Matt were born, I had our son Josh, who graduated from college in 2011.

We have 5 Grandchildren and one eligible bachelor. Keeps me young :)

I'm now retired from full time teaching, but still occasionally take in students to teach English and the American culture, working for Adventure International.

I love traveling and have had the opportunity (years apart), to go to India, Grenada, Germany, Italy, Haiti, Tecate, and Texas. I'm planning a trip in the fall to Israel.

Last year we had our two teenage granddaughters move in with us, as their High school in India, yes INDIA, closed unexpectedly.

This took me back into the high school scene, but this time with girls. Such fun, so much energy, so many activities.

Graduation is coming soon for our track (dare I mention Grossmont), 'athlete of the year' granddaughter, who is heading off to college, and then we'll be spending some time with our dogs and cat and traveling in the RV looking for places to visit, and as opportunities arise, ways to make a positive difference.

Looking forward to seeing you all at the reunion. Has it really been 50 years already?
