Since 1964, I graduated from SDSU with degrees in Asian Studies, History and Anthropology, married an Air Force Pilot, lived in Tokyo, raised two beautiful girls in La Mesa who are graduates of Helix High, Cal Berkeley and UC Santa Barbara. Today Lara/John, with 3 children live in New York and Marlie/Eric, twins, live in Washington DC.

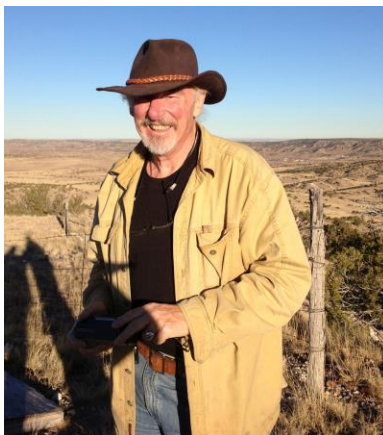

Twenty years ago I married my Philosophy Professor, Jay Clark, and together we have built a house, restored several historic buildings, and are currently building a small ranch-all in AZ.

For the last 15 years, I have been the archaeologist, historian, curator and exhibit designer for the Yuma Crossing National Heritage Area. I manage two state parks including the Yuma Territorial Prison. The Heritage Area has also restored 1500 acres of the Lower Colorado River (the most endangered river in the U.S.) Happily I can say these 15 years in Yuma have been joyous and creative. I have been asked to stay in my current job for another 5 years. Retirement?

Privately, Jay and I own a historic adobe residence and a 1909 church complex (listed on the National Register) where I have a cooking school in the old church kitchen: Tina's Cocina. Check us out at Stpaulsculturalcenter.com.
